   Note: Proposal was deferred in November because of reviewer absence.
   Proposal was deferred in December. The committee asks that the department address the following concerns:
   1) The committee requests more information about the qualifications of the instructor. It would also be helpful to see the instructor’s c.v.
   2) What is the long-term plan for the course; will an adjunct always teach this course or will faculty take over teaching of the course?
   3) The committee is concerned about the academic rigor of the course.
   Once the department submits a response, the committee will be notified. Department response:
   1) Forthcoming
   2) Instructor is a full-time member of the department’s academic staff
   3) Forthcoming
27. Slavic (Slavic Languages) 892 - Apprenticeship in Writing (Green)

Type of proposal: New course

Note: The committee deferred this proposal at the December meeting. While the committee is favorable toward the proposal, it requests that the department clarify the following:

1) How is this course different from independent study?
2) How does this fit into the graduate program?
3) Is the purpose to provide more time for students to prepare work for publication, or is it to offer supervision for feedback on writing?
4) Is this a way of accounting for faculty time?
5) Does the department intend to have multiple faculty members teach this course, or will there be one designated faculty member?

Response from the department (Judith Kornblatt): SL892 is an integral part of our new graduate curriculum. Along with SL891, it will serve an important role in the professional development of our advanced graduate students and, as such, is distinct from our two current independent study courses at the graduate level: SL699 and SL799. It will be an opportunity for an advanced student or dissertator to develop writing /beyond/ the level of a seminar (or independent study) paper, and work one-on-one with a faculty member on the entire publication process. All faculty members will be eligible to teach this course, and it is our assumption that a student will choose to work either with the original instructor of the seminar or with her/his advisor. It is part of our attempt to professionalize our program, and to provide "value-added" in our national and international profile. A dedicated number for this course will allow us to audit the enrollment over time, separate from our more general independent study courses. This will enable us to assess the success of our professional development curriculum.

Response from L&S curriculum committee on 12/14/12: I am reminded that this proposal was an essential element for several changes to the Slavic Graduate program which were approved by the L&S Curriculum Committee some time ago. Because changes in program requirements are not the province of Divisional, the committee is likely unaware of the articulate rationale provided for this course. For that reason, I have attached the L&S Curriculum Committee's approval and the proposal approved. (Also, we should let you know that the L&S Approval has been communicated to the Graduate School, which has not - as far as I know - expressed any concern about the role this course is intended to play in graduate level education.)
